Sweden A Force in Biotech

A flexible research environment explains the biotech industry's strong position in Sweden. With more than 200 biotech companies, Sweden hosts Europe's fourth-largest biotech community and the largest measured per capita.

The unique Swedish system of "professor's exemption," where academic researchers retain patent rights to their own discoveries, is one of the cornerstones of the biotech industry. The free movement of researchers between academia and corporations leads to a stream of new biotech start-ups. This constant interplay gives Swedish biotech firms access to the latest scientific research. According to a survey by the Swedish Agency for Innovation (Vinnova), as many as 93 percent of all Swedish biotech companies are involved in R&D collaborations with academic researchers.

Three of Europe's strongest clusters of biotechnology are found in Sweden: Stockholm/Uppsala, Göteborg and Malmö/Lund, according to the Boston Consulting Group.
